to better health

You don't need a lot of time to be more active. Take the stairs instead of the escalator, park in the farthest spot, take an after-dinner walk with your family, or give the dog a longer walk. The small choices you make today add up to better health tomorrow—and when they add up to 10,000 steps a day or an extra 30 minutes of walking, you're meeting the Surgeon General's recommendation for basic fitness.

That's why Blue Cross/Blue Shield has designed WalkingWorksSM, a new program to help you set and meet your own personal walking goals. Log on to www.bcbsvt.com for easy ways to fit walking into your daily routine, and a journal to record your progress.

Anyone can be more active—and just about everyone should. It's a great way we can each decrease our risk for costly health problems down the road, and help keep healthcare affordable.
